"I wonder what Aoko is doing at home," Njeri said, looking at her friend Cherono. "Why don’t we go and find out?"

The three were close friends and not separable. They spent most of the day together during the school holidays. Nine o’clock always found the girls together, and they would not part till evening. Surprising today, Aoko was nowhere to be seen yet it was already 10 o’clock.

The two girls walked to Aoko’s home. As they neared the house, Njeri called out, "Aoko, you have visitors!" There was no answer. Obviously, their friend was not in.

Outside the house was seated an old lady the two girls had never seen before. They went up to her and Cherono greeted her in Aoko’s mother tongue. Cherono spoke the language very well, one could not tell she was from a different community. The old lady answered and smiled widely, exposing her toothless mouth. Njeri guessed the old lady was may be a hundred years old. Cherono then asked her where Aoko was.

I sent her to the shops to buy something, just get in and wait. I’m sure she’s on her way back," said the lady.

Njeri did not understand a word. She just followed her friend into the house.

Half an hour later, the girls were still waiting. Njeri became impatient and suggested that they go away and return later. Cherono on the other hand had a different idea. She was thinking about the old lady seated outside.

"Why don’t we go out and talk to the lady, you know these old people usually have motivating stories to tell," she said.

"But I won’t understand a thing. For you, the language is not a problem, so you’ll probably enjoy the stories," complained Njeri.

After a little encouragement, Njeri accepted, but asked Cherono to translate everything into English or Kiswahili. They went out and found the lady singing quietly. She did not seem to notice the two girls, who also did not want to disturb her.

"Oh!" she said when she saw that she was being watched. "I really love singing. It is good for the soul. Do you also sing?" She asked.

Njeri looked at Cherono expecting her to interpret what the lady had just said. And she did.

"I see your friend does not understand our language, said the lady in English. The two girls were surprised. "I just wanted to find out whether you two also love to sing," she said, looking at Njeri.

"Yes," replied Njeri, "but I did not know you spoke English."

The lady laughed loudly, again exposing her toothless mouth. She then went on to explain that she was a retired teacher of English, having taught for forty years.

"I was taught English by the English people," she boasted.

"Just as I learnt your language from your people," Cherono said proudly. It was the lady’s turn to be surprised. "You mean you do not come from our community yet you speak our language so well?"

Aoko arrived to find the three deep in conversation. She was holding a newspaper. She explained that she had had to walk all the way to the shopping centre for it. "My great grandmother loves reading and as soon as she arrived here this morning she asked for a newspaper."

Soon afterwards the three girls walked away leaving the old lady reading the paper.

Read the passage below and then answer questions 39 to 50.

One of the most surprising things about the discovery of a very old cemetery in an Oasis in Egypt was that no one was looking for it. No one even knew it existed. It had been completely buried by sand. In 1996, a donkey belonging to a guard at the nearby temple made a hole in the sand. When the guard peered into the hole, he saw something shining brightly. He reported to Egyptian archaeologists.

However, the archaeologists did not begin serious digging immediately. They did not have the workers or the money. So they made a quick survey of the area, and then covered everything up again. They wanted to hide it from thieves and protect it from the sun and weather. Finally, in 1999, they had enough money to begin digging up the area.

On their first day of work, after digging only several feet into the sand, they found a lot of mummies. Mummies are dead bodies that have been preserved for a long time. They are mostly found in Egypt. One of them had a beautiful mask. It was not a pharaoh's mummy. Most of the people buried here came from families that became rich by trading in wine.

The most attractive of these mummies have masks made of plaster covered with gold. Many are in wonderful condition. And because grave robbers never found these tombs, everything that was buried with them is still there. Most of the mummies have been left where they were found, but a few of the best preserved ones are kept in the Museum, where people can go and see them.

Two mummies were found lying side by side and were may be a husband and a wife. His mask and chest were made beautiful by religious drawings. Her head was turned in his direction, showing that the husband had died first.

Two other mummies are of children. Archaeologists think they were brother and sister because they were found together. The boy was may be about five years old. His mask with its painted eyes made him look alive.

Did archaeologists find valuables in these tombs? It depends on what you mean by valuables. They have not found any solid gold, but they have discovered all sorts of objects. The people buried in the cemetery may have thought some of these items would be useful in the life after death. Or some may have been presented as gifts to the gods. For example, archaeologists have dug up small carvings of various gods. They have found many pieces of jewelry - necklaces, bracelets and anklets - made of copper, glass, ivory and expensive stones.

They have also discovered many pots used for storing, cooking or serving food. There were some bronze Greek and Roman coins too. And in the children's tombs, they found toys - carved animals for the children to play with in the life after death.

Archaeologists will be able to learn more about these people and their way of life by further studying their mummies and the things buried with them. And so many mummies were buried in the Valley of the Golden Mummies that digging up and learning will continue in the area for years to come.
